

Flower Crowns

Here is a simple flower crown kids can make and wear.

This is a fun nature craft that gets kids outdoors collecting flowers, leaves and sticks, plus it's great for creativity with pattern making and designing the finished crowns. Once they have them on their heads the flower crowns will inspire imaginary play.

Easy flower crowns for kids

You will need:

- flowers and leaves collected fresh from the garden
- heavy construction paper (card stock is best)
- double sided tape, or hot glue
- scissors
- Stapler

How to:

Prepare the card stock for the kids by cutting it into strips and then stapling two strips together to make one long one. Our strips are approx 8cm (just over 3") in height, and each crown needed two strips for a child's head size. Older kids may need it to be slightly longer, and they could do the cutting etc themselves.

Place double sided tape along the strips to create a sticky surface. I've just put two long pieces on ours. Leave the paper backing on the strips until the kids are ready to do the sticking. If you don't have double sided tape collect all the materials then hot glue it to the crown.

Now you're ready to go!

Once the kids have collected some flowers and leaves, set them out with the strips on the table and they can stick them on.

I found that the girls loved creating patterns with the flowers and came up with some gorgeous finished crowns!

So simple and fun!
